Yale-New Haven Hospital General Clinical Research Center

Funded by the National Institutes of Health, the Clinical Research Center at Yale-New Haven Hospital strives for continued excellence in research, exceptional patient satisfaction, and outstanding patient/staff education.

All patients and subjects on our 11-bed Unit – featuring both inpatients and outpatients – are participants in some form of clinical research. With a patient population spanning the full breadth of Pediatric and Adult care, our Center handles all diagnoses where a research protocol is open, such as:

- Endocrinology
- Cardiology
- Psychiatry
- Neurology

All staff members participate in projects or committees to encourage their professional development. These include the Striving for Excellence program, which focuses on clinical practice challenges, decreasing resource waste and patient satisfaction, and our dynamic Recognition and Career Advancement Program (RCAP).
